

JACK'S CAFE

OUR NAMESAKE
ANDREW JACKSON LONGSTREET

THE STORY OF OUR NAMESAKE ANDREW JACKSON LONGSTREET (1843 - 1928)

He stood nearly six feet tall with piercing blue eyes, wore a beard, long hair and a reputation as a tough hombre.

Legend has it Jack Longstreet was a notorious wild west gunfighter and renegade. While his gun had several notches, those who fell to bullets from his Colt .45 long barrel were done in self-defense. Jack Longstreet never backed away from a fight and was called upon to settle arguments and to curtail the activities of criminals that roamed with area of Amargosa Valley.

History reports, he lost a part of one ear early on from a cattle rustling altercation. Jack Longstreet settled in Ash Meadows, part of Amargosa Valley, in the year 1896 and built a cabin, which has been preserved by the US Park Service and is part of the visitor attractions within Ash Meadows Wildlife Refuge, just across the highway from the Longstreet Inn & Casino.

He later became a friend to the Western Shoshone and Southern Paiute Indian tribes settled in the valley. He spoke their languages and had several native wives, the last being Fanny Black.

Jack Longstreet worked with the miners and ranchers previously settled in Amargosa Valley. On his 80-acre spread in Ash meadows he raised horses and had previously owned a saloon and drug store in rural Nevada.

In his memory, the developer and owner of the Longstreet Inn & Casino, Mr. Jim Marsh, has named this resort after Jack Longstreet. His memory lives on in the statue and artifacts found on display through out his property.
